

Is that really the challenge? If no, why?

This is really a challenge! In the EU the grassroots movements can learn from each other, inspire each other and activate each other.

4

yes, in European projects and cooperation it is all about creating impact, but often the local perspective is not on board.

What makes it a challenge?

finding the right connection to other regions

policy, language, time, really getting to know each other en the different contexts in which movements are active.

To define: What's is it for us to know where to start

Clear agendas of the different stakeholders involved (there may be conflicting political agendas, it is good to be aware of them)

Motivation to have time and committment.

Political and legal frameworks

Language differences

What is the context behind the challenge?

A grass roots movement is complex, ask a lot of time, energy and persistence. When we meet each other in the EU we can join powers and combine niches and transform it in a gulfstream of change.

looking for network and funding for strenghtening this. work bottom up and being flexibility

connect to community thinking in other regions specific themes that apply for communities, making it accessible for citizens

the regional, but also national prespective

Can you make it more concrete?

successes and failures must be shared; so share this online and in the fysical world

2

adopt Positive Health as a framework together (so we have the same understanding of health)

Can there be a mooc with practical examples

Learn to know each other

Sharing good practices
